The Harappan Civilisation

The period between 4000 and 3000 BC saw remarkable progress. Man acquired greater knowledge and skill in mastering the forces of nature. He took to agriculture and made more efficient tools and started living a settled life on the bank of river. The river valleys had the agriculture potential to support a dense population and produce surplus food. Such knowledge and skills enabled people to advance to a new stage in the progress of civilisation.

The Bronze Age Civilisation.

Man learnt the art of mixing copper with tin or zinc to produce the alloy called bronze. It is harder and more ductile than copper. Because of the importance of bronze in the growth of the first civilisation, these civilisation are known as the Bronze Age Civilisation.
